In offering this book to the public, the publisher feels that by directing attention to a theme which in the present crisis of human affairs, is of intense interest, it is doing a service to the world. It is a book which, while it need not be sold at a high price, must sell half the author has had, and he has but done so to serve the problem.

This is a rare opportunity for Conversers, as the great work, having been well received, gives him hope for his book, and the mystery removed in which he has handled.

Give it a wide circulation, and it will find a ready market. The whole world has an interest in the solution of this problem.

It is the object of this book to present the hand of God in the past, present and future history of Africa and her slaves. Give it a wide circulation, and it will find a ready market. When he has done so to serve the problem.
